

The book was found

We've Got A Job: The 1963 Birmingham Children's March (Jane Addams Award Book (Awards))

Synopsis

We've Got a Job tells the little-known story of the 4,000 black elementary-, middle-, and high school students who voluntarily went to jail in Birmingham, Alabama, between May 2 and May 11, 1963. Fulfilling Mahatma Gandhi's and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s precept to fill the jails, they succeeded where adults had failed in desegregating one of the most racially violent cities in America. Focusing on four of the original participants who have participated in extensive interviews, We've Got a Job recounts the astonishing events before, during, and after the Children's March.

Book Information

Lexile Measure: 1020L (What's this?)

Series: Jane Addams Award Book (Awards)

Hardcover: 176 pages

Publisher: Peachtree Publishers; Third Edition edition (February 1, 2012)

Language: English

ISBN-10: 1561456276

ISBN-13: 978-1561456277

Product Dimensions: 0.8 x 9.5 x 10 inches

Shipping Weight: 1.7 pounds (View shipping rates and policies)

Average Customer Review: 4.7 out of 5 stars 46 customer reviews

Best Sellers Rank: #89,377 in Books (See Top 100 in Books) #19 in Books > Teens > Social Issues > Prejudice #26 in Books > Teens > Education & Reference > History > United States > 20th Century #98 in Books > Children's Books > Education & Reference > History > United States > 1900s

Age Range: 12 - 15 years

Grade Level: 7 - 10

Customer Reviews

STARRED REVIEW Even with the many fine books out there about the role of young people in the Civil Rights era, this highly readable photo-essay will hold YA readers with its focus on four young people who participated in the Birmingham Children's March, set against the big picture of the fight against segregation and the roles of adults. At nine, Audrey Hendricks was the youngest of nearly 4,000 black children who marched, protested, and sang their way to jail, and she had the support of her church, teachers, and middle-class parents. Washington Booker lived in poverty in the projects; for him the police were the ultimate terror. Smart, academic James Stewart chose not to do sit-ins, but marching felt right. Arnetta Streeter went to young activists training. Important adult leaders on all sides are included in the story, from Martin Luther King, Jr. and the Reverend Shuttlesworth to Bull Connor, and Levinson points out not just the individuals with extreme viewpoints, but also the moderates who kept quiet about the insulting separate but equal policies. The format will hook readers with spacious type, boxed quotes, and large black-and-white photos on almost every double-page spread, from the horrifying view of the Klan marching with children to the young protestors waiting to be arrested. A fascinating look at a rarely covered event for both curriculum and personal interest. Chapter notes, a timeline, and a bibliography conclude. Hazel Rochman

--Booklist STARRED REVIEW This chronicle of a pivotal chapter of the civil rights movement weaves together the stories of four black children in Birmingham, Ala., who were among some 4,000 who boycotted school to participate in a march to protest segregation. Before recounting that event, during which almost 2,500 young people were arrested and jailed, first-time author Levinson opens with intimate profiles of the four spotlighted children (drawn from interviews she conducted with each of them), along with descriptions of Birmingham's racist laws, corrupt politicians, antiblack sentiment and activists' efforts to fight all of the above. Readers also get an up-close view of such leaders as Rev. Fred Shuttlesworth, who founded the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights; Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., who advocated a nonviolent response; and James Bevel, a preacher who rallied the city's children and teens. Yet the most compelling component is Levinson's dramatic recreation of the courageous children's crusade and the change it helped bring about in the face of widespread prejudice and brutality. Powerful period photos and topical sidebars heighten the story's impact. Ages 10 up. Agent: Erin Murphy, Erin Murphy Literary Agency. (Feb.)

--Publishers Weekly STARRED REVIEW The author takes her inspiring tale of courage in the face of both irrational racial hatred and adult foot-dragging (on both sides) through the ensuing riots and the electrifying September bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church...A moving record of young people rising at a pivotal historical moment, based on original interviews and archival research as well as published sources. --Kirkus Publishers Weekly Best Books of 2012 --Publishers

Weekly STARRED REVIEW Triumph and tragedy in 1963 Birmingham, as children and teens pick up the flagging Civil Rights movement and give it a swift kick in the pants. Levinson builds her dramatic account around the experiences of four young arrestees including a 9-year-old, two teenage activists trained in nonviolent methods and a high-school dropout who was anything but nonviolent. She opens by mapping out the segregated society of Birmingham and the internal conflicts and low levels of adult participation that threatened to bring the planned jail-filling marches dubbed Project C (for confrontation), and by extension the entire civil-rights campaign in the South, to a standstill. Until, that is, a mass exodus from the city's black high schools (plainly motivated, at least at first, almost as much by the chance to get out of school as by any social cause) at the beginning of May put thousands of young people on the streets and in the way of police dogs, fire hoses and other abuses before a national audience. The author takes her inspiring tale of courage in the face of both irrational racial hatred and adult foot-dragging (on both sides) through the ensuing riots and the electrifying September bombing of the Sixteenth Street Baptist Church, then brings later lives of her central participants up to date. A moving record of young people rising at a pivotal historical moment, based on original interviews and archival research as well as published sources. (photos, timeline, endnotes, multimedia resource lists) (Nonfiction. 11-15) --Kirkus

Cynthia Y. Levinson holds degrees from Wellesley College and Harvard University and also attended the Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs. A former teacher and educational policy consultant and researcher, she has published articles in Appleseeds, Calliope, Cobblestone, Dig, Faces, and Odyssey.

I stayed up all night to read this breathtaking, informative and inspirational book about the Birmingham Children's March in Birmingham, Alabama. This beautifully written and photographed book tells the story of the 4,000 children who integrated Birmingham after the adults, feeling frightened of violence and probable loss of livelihoods, stopped protesting with Dr. Martin King Jr. and other clergy. Facing violence, expulsion from school, threats to their parents' lives, and the killing of 4 little girls from a bomb planted at church by white supremacists, the children of Birmingham continued to march and protest until they won significant concessions from Bull Connor and the white power structure. It also frankly discusses the use of non-violent and violent tactics used by the Black community to protect themselves, a topic that is not often discussed. This book for older children, teens and adults inspires us to fight for what is right, and gives us courage for the journey.

I really enjoyed reading this non-fiction book. I was hooked since page one, thinking it was like a short text book, since it's full of information. I strongly believe that this book should be read by every generation so that we can fully understand the events that led to the signing of the Civil Rights Act in 1964. All I can say this book is it is a must read for everyone! As a future educator, I plan to keep this book available for my students. Personally I was astonished to read about children and teenagers protesting and marching to secure their freedom. Audrey, James, Washington, and Arnetta have changed my perspective by risking their own lives to protect adults who feared losing their jobs, or worse, their lives. Most of the personal stories are heartbreaking, but can definitely influence, inspire and motivate future generations to prevent something like this from happening again. This is the kind of text that motivated me to pursue a teaching career, so that children are able to read and re-live an important part of history, and be able to learn the truth.

Oscar Wilde supposedly said, "Any fool can make history, but it takes genius to write it." While I don't necessarily agree with the first part, the second part absolutely rings true. After all, how do you make a story compelling when everyone already knows how it ends? Cynthia Levinson has proven her genius here, because she accomplishes that and so much more in WE'VE GOT A JOB. By anchoring the events surrounding the 1963 Birmingham Children's March in the personal narratives of four of its direct participants, Levinson puts readers on the ground in Birmingham. We may know the final outcome, but we have no idea how we're ever going to get there, and this day-by-day account of the incremental progress--and setbacks--will keep readers turning the pages to find out what happened next. This is a nonfiction book with as much drama and pacing as THE HUNGER GAMES. I literally couldn't put it down, except for when I became too teary-eyed to continue reading, which happened often. There is so much to love about this book, but I think my favorite thing about it is how Levinson humanizes everyone involved. It's not as much a movement or an event as it is individuals, each with his or her own motivations, working with or against each other. I loved reading that even the revered leaders (for both sides of the issue) were hardly ever in agreement. Everyone involved was taking a chance, a risk, a guess as to what was going to work--or not. They were all fighting for what they believed in, each in his or her own unique way. Nothing was simple. Nothing was clear. I wholeheartedly think this book should be in every library, in every classroom, and in every home in America for its history as well as for its message for the future. Buy it, read it, recommend it, share it. The book also includes a table of contents, author's note, timeline, map, acknowledgements, extensive source notes, bibliography (recommended resources), photo credits, and a detailed index. Levinson also has additional info, lesson plans, discussion questions, curriculum guides, and more on her website ([...]).

Levinson has done an incredible job with this book. Not only does she give an account of the events leading up to and including the Children's March but she merges comments from some of the participants. This is how narrative nonfiction should be done. The book is beautifully organized with complementary photographs. I almost felt like I was there while reading this book. I think what makes this account so powerful is the sense of immediacy that Levinson has created. It felt like it was happening as I was reading about it rather than almost fifty years ago. It was amazing to read about the courage of the children who participate, ages 9 to 18 with a few adults mixed in. The story in the prologue starts the book off with a bang. The idea of a nine-year-old child telling her parents that she wants to go to jail hit me hard. The descriptions of hundreds of children crammed into jail cells meant to hold many fewer occupants was also full of impact. I think the part though that really got me was when fire hoses were turned on the marchers. Clearly, the author has done her research, but more than that, she has made it understandable for the young reader. I highly, highly recommend this book for any reader who wants to see the power of unity or the power of children to make a difference. This would be a great book to use in teaching about civil rights or just plain courage.

Great book about unheralded heroes of the civil rights movement: the children who protested and filled the Birmingham jails in order to bring the country's and the world's attention to the problems of segregation in Birmingham, AL. A very inspiring story of bravery, non-violence and faith. Arrived on time and in great shape.

Download to continue reading...

We've Got a Job: The 1963 Birmingham Children's March (Jane Addams Award Book (Awards))
We've Got a Job: The 1963 Birmingham Children's March Separate Is Never Equal: Sylvia Mendez and Her Family's Fight for Desegregation (Jane Addams Award Book (Awards)) Separate Is Never Equal: Sylvia Mendez and Her Family's Fight for Desegregation (Jane Addams Award Book (Awards)) Each Kindness (Jane Addams Award Book (Awards)) Emma's Poem: The Voice of the Statue of Liberty (Jane Addams Award Book (Awards)) The Curse of the Pharaohs : My Adventures with Mummies (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) (Bccb Blue Ribbon Nonfiction Book Award (Awards)) Birmingham: Where To Go, What To See - A Birmingham Travel Guide (Great Britain,London,Birmingham,Glasgow,Liverpool,Bristol,Manchester Book 3) Birmingham: Where To Go, What To See - A Birmingham Travel Guide (Great Britain,London,Birmingham,Glasgow,Liverpool,Bristol,Manchester) (Volume 3) Shutting Out the Sky: Life in the Tenements of New York, 1880-1924 (Jane Addams Honor Book (Awards)) Sit-In: How Four Friends Stood Up by Sitting Down (Jane Addams Honor Book (Awards)) We Will Not Be Silent: The White Rose Student Resistance Movement That Defied Adolf Hitler (Jane Addams Honor Book (Awards)) The House That Jane Built: A Story About Jane Addams Job Interview: Land Your Dream Job by Conquering Your next Job Interview by Answering 50 Tough Job Interview

Questions and Maximizing Your Resume and Cover Letter Fifo 50 States (Mom's Choice Award Recipient, 1st Place Purple Dragonfly Awards, National Indie Excellence Award Finalist) The Watsons Go to Birmingham--1963 (Newbery Honor Book) The Watsons Go to Birmingham--1963 Pancho Rabbit and the Coyote: A Migrant's Tale (Tomas Rivera Mexican-American Children's Book Award (Awards)) Jose! Born to Dance: The Story of Jose Limon (Tomas Rivera Mexican-American Children's Book Award (Awards)) Out of Shadows (Costa Book Award - Children's Book Award)

Contact Us

DMCA

Privacy

FAQ & Help