Kent Schulte lives in Boulder, Colorado. He is often out exploring the countryside. He strives to combine the art & science of map making in order to produce the perfect map. His maps have won first place in competitions.

We used this when hiking the four pass loop around Maroon Bells. It was more a backup to the GPS, but it was nice for planning, and nice to look at when at camp and remind ourselves of what was to come the next day. Well constructed. Good map design. Will use many times in the future for other trails in the area.

Great, detailed map. Includes mileage on all the trails. However it is HUGE. And heavy. I appreciate the waterproof/tear resistance, but I can't imagine ever carrying this while I'm actually backpacking. It's a great planning tool, just go to caltopo and print out the sections you actually need while hiking.

Detailed, rugged, and a joy to read and study. Used them on a 6 day, 5 pass loop around Maroon Peak. Excellent quality. Beware other maps that don't have trail mileage.

Great map. Got us through our three day backpacking trip near Crested Butte. We only got off the trail once (our own fault) but this helped us orient ourselves to quickly relocate where we needed to go. Good material and good color and detail!

If doing Four Pass Loop, this is the one you want, not the NG one.

GREAT quality and superb level of detail. I was surprised that I liked it even more than the 'yellow' brand of maps.

This map turned out to be the favorite one to refer to on a recent group backpack with five other guys. It shows accurate location, distances and easy to read contour lines. My fellow group members frequently asked to see it, as it was the most reliable one any of us had.

This is an awesome map. It is easy to read, and is packed with information. A much better choice than National Geographic Trail Illustrated.
